Every single alt-tech site has failed. Why? Because the free market does not solve the issue of monopolies. Only government can break up monopolies. DLive was supposed to be the free speech alternative to YouTube livestreaming, independently based on blockchain so as to be free from the possibility of censorship. Bitcoin and blockchain were always giant scams, and so is DLive, which has just engaged in its first wave of bannings following the Capitol storming. Among these are Nick Fuentes, Baked Alaska and Nick Ochs, a member of the Proud boys. DLive published a list of accounts they have banned:

Fuentes published a response to his banning on Telegram.

> You may have heard already that I have been permanently banned on DLive as of this morning. As promised, the show will return on Monday at the usual time! I will have more details on Monday so stay tuned to this telegram channel for updates! We are inevitable.
>
> Unfortunately for the hall monitors trying to censor me, I have already reached a critical mass and what I have set in motion can no longer be stopped by their tedious deplatforming efforts.
>
> Just so everybody understands, we are going to make this banning extremely painful for DLive. I am consulting with my lawyers about which legal options to pursue. Stay tuned to this channel, I will be calling on your help very shortly!
>
> Please share the link to this channel on Twitter, Parler, and elsewhere. The great thing about Telegram is that it is encrypted, has 500 million active users, and it's stable. We should be safe here for now! This is the best way to keep up with me for the foreseeable future.
>
> All things considered, we got pretty lucky so far. Had I rushed into the Capitol on Wednesday, I would be in big trouble legally or worse. Thankfully I did not. Getting deplatformed was always inevitable and part of the plan. If that's the worst thing to come out of this then we are in good shape. Trust God, trust the plan!

Notice that in Nick's last remark, he ties trusting God with trusting the plan, which is an America First term for never leaving the cult of Trump.

> Too often “loyalty” serves as a euphemism for stupidity, blindness, or an absence of critical thinking. If you’re on the Titanic, and you see an iceberg, you should warn people, take command of the ship, or at least save your own skin. The highest loyalty should be to the lives of those you care about. Showing loyalty to the Titanic is grotesque. Willfully ignoring the ice berg doesn’t make you a “visionary.”

Even though Fuentes denies being at the Capitol Insurrection, there is a digital paper trail with money changing hands that previews a crackdown.

> Confessing to a federal crime on a live-stream can only be described as suicidal. The “America First” eCelebs will be in prison by the end of the Year. Mark my words. There is a digital trail of funding during the “stop the steal” period. And here Fuentes is bragging about disrupting Congress—not claiming that things got out of hand but establishing intent.You could say all criminals secretly want to get caught… My sense is that Zoomers can’t separate real-world consequences—in this case, those that come from attacking the government itself—and the “lulz” and “keks” of playing a video game. Whatever the case, the dominos are going to fall in the coming months… I always despised Nick Fuentes and everything he represents. But even I never wished something like this to happen to him.
>
> To be fair, from what I’ve heard, Fuentes didn’t actually go in the Capitol. The clip here is him talking in general terms. There was a picture going around that was purported to be him, but that was proven to be someone else.
>
> I’ve seen that, too. It might save him—but I doubt it. Right now, people are underestimating the level of intensity that the federal government will prosecute this. You have clearly networked people, throwing cash around, conspiring to commit a major crime. A crackdown is coming.

The people who become big names as a result of the rise of Donald Trump, like Fuentes, recognize in their hearts that the gig is up. There is no way for the America First movement to ever be rehabilitated, at least to in my mind. These people make the Tea Party look upright and bright. There is just something about Trump that has propelled into internet fame freaks and weirdos like Fuentes and Baked, who otherwise would have no career or grift outside gaming streams.

> I feel enormously sorry for the thousands of people who have been psychologically manipulated by people like Bannon, Fuentes, etc. They were set up to fail. Many of those who attended this rally and never went anywhere near the Capitol will suffer the consequences. These folks are, in a way, typical Americans. They're basically good people. Having them following your cause can be a gift (more clicks, more money, etc) or a curse (they have zero prudential judgment).
>
> In a vanguard or dissident political movement, it's actually more important to have the RIGHT people listening to you, rather than the MOST people listening to you. America First went after the numbers because they were always a grift, never a serious movement. This America First was always a pale, warped shadow of the original America First, which was the only genuine and powerful right wing movement in America in the 20th century. It, too, died when the FBI came to William Regnery's house and essentially shuttered the organization.
> What came after that was Conservatism—never genuinely a movement of the right, always playing games with the System in order to avoid the fate of America First. Ironically, the "America First" of today was nothing like its namesake in terms of ideas—it was just another form of Conservatism—but it will suffer the fate of its namesake anyway. Can we FINALLY learn that CONSERVATISM is the enemy? That nothing can be accomplished until it is destroyed? Only then can we get down to serious business. Conservatism delenda est.

Populism is a joke, Trumpism is a grift, conservatism is repackaged liberalism. If you don't get it by now, you are truly beyond hope. And if you truly don't get it, you deserve every disappointed and jail sentence coming your way. It's time to grow up and learn from our mistakes. Conservatism is the enemy!
